

Call for Paper “LIEPP Brown Bag Methodological Seminar”

The Laboratory for interdisciplinary evaluation of public policies (LIEPP) proposes a new initiative: a series of brown bag seminars to discuss methodological issues in an interdisciplinary setting. We seek researchers and doctoral students happy to present and discuss a working paper presenting and discussing substantive methodological issues, i.e. technical problems, coding or measurement issues, link between theory and measurement, etc.

The main aim is to develop a more informed and conscious use of diverse methodological techniques that can foster and enrich our substantive debates around academic work and public policies.

The seminar will take the following format:

- A paper is circulated in advance among the members of the seminar group.
- The discussion will be shortly introduced by the author (no more than 15 min.) and the seminar will take place at lunchtime for one and half hour.

If you are interested in presenting, please contact Emanuele Ferragina (emanuele.ferragina@sciencespo.fr) or Jan Rovny (jan.rovny@sciencespo.fr).

For more information, see the detailed presentation of the seminar attached.
