

School of Public Affairs

Master in Public Policy, Social Policy and Social Innovation Stream

Fall Semester 2022: Call for applications for a course on migration and public policy

The School of Public Affairs is recruiting an adjunct professor to teach a new elective course within the Social Policy and Social Innovation Policy Stream.

This course will take place in the 2022 fall semester, open to Master's students in both the Master in Public Policy and the Master in European Affairs, and to students from all of the School's policy streams. The format will be a 24-hour course, taught in English, with 2-hour classes over a period of 12 weeks, and a class size of about 20 students. We therefore encourage a high level of participation and interaction from the students. We also strongly encourage innovative class formats, that can range from small group discussions, debates, simulations, concrete projects, among others.

The topic envisioned for this course will be a focus on migration, asylum and public policy. We are seeking a professor who is prepared to show how migration-related policies are viewed and adapted through different lenses, in both an academic and political perspective, while utilizing an interdisciplinary approach to identify and dissect a range of topics in this field. The syllabus should include both scientific research and secondary resources responding to current events, and the political and social debates on migration and public policy today.

For applications outside of our permanent faculty members, the remuneration for an elective course is 72.87 euros/hour (pre-tax) for 24 hours for the course. For permanent faculty members, this would apply toward your teaching hours. Applicants should be based in Paris to teach on site.

Deadline to apply: 4 April 2022

Interested candidates may send their detailed course proposal, completing the template below (including syllabus, course description/format and suggested readings) and their CVs to:

Jennie Cottle: jennie.cottle@sciencespo.fr ; Academic Advisor, Social Policy and Social Innovation

Bruno Palier: bruno.palier@sciencespo.fr ; Scientific Advisor, Social Policy and Social Innovation

COURSE PRESENTATION

Title:

Instructor Information:

Course Content:

Learning Objectives, skills acquired:

Teaching style:

Grading and Assignments:

Resources mobilized for the course:

Readings (required/suggested):

Progression of the course and proposed topics to be covered throughout the semester (by week, or block of several weeks):