Agathe Sarfati, the 2015 David Gritz Scholarship recipient states, after completing the first year of her Master:

This year in Paris has been very intense. I have had the opportunity to focus on core fields in international security, most notably on the different branches of international public law, on intelligence, and security, giving me keys to better understand contemporary debates. In only a few months, I have improved my critical thinking, sharpened my arguments and deepened my understanding of complex issues. Not to forget that I have started to learn Arabic! I have also been volunteering as a French teacher to refugees in Paris thanks to the Sciences-Po Refugees Help Association. This volunteering program has anchored my passion in reality.

The richness of PSIA, thanks to its student body as well as to the quality of the teaching, has created an extremely intellectually stimulating environment that I am honored to be part of.
